

PERSONAL AND SOCIETY.

For the season.
As Josiah Allen's wife would say, "It's just a year ago." One of the past days, which was a beautiful one, a young gentleman invited a young lady friend to go out for a drive. While out they saw two ladies meet and go through the customary osculatory performance, whenupon she suddenly and emphatically said, "I hate to kiss women!" Taking it for granted that she did like to kiss men, he leaned over and helped himself to a roving kiss, right on the lips. What further happened has not been reported, but the great question which is now agitating the public is, "Which is right?"

This is the time of the year that tries women's souls, for the all-absorbing subject of what to do to wear for the fall and winter season. And to get some advice to make your dress right away is as bad as trying to get the plumber "this afternoon, sure." The party and reception dress must also be bought and made soon, for Dame Rumor says the coming four months are to be gay ones socially. In addition to the one-hundred-and-one weddings, the gentlemen who arranged for the assemblies last winter are planning for three parties, and at least three swell Germans and perhaps four. The assemblies have been the most profitable events that have ever taken place here publicly, and just about as elegant as anything given privately. The parties of a decade or more ago were more numerous than those of later years, and nearly all entertainments took the large party as a model. Now, almost to the utter exclusion of any men, the women content themselves by each giving one every year or two a large afternoon reception, nearly always on Wednesday or Friday, from 3 to 6 o'clock. No dancing, no cards; nothing but to stand up and talk for one or two minutes to all who come to get near. Select some one or two to go with you to the dinner-room, return to the parlor, make your adieu to the hostess and retire from the gay and festive scene. The evening parties, where whole families are invited to come at 8 o'clock and stay long, are the place, and are now far between, and the series of parties are welcomed by many who really enjoy fashionable dancing parties. Clusters of sets always have a good time, especially among the young people. Besides the old club, a number of new ones will be organized soon for this winter's pleasure, and have the customary features; either dancing, cards, dramatic or literary purport, and others like the Cottillon, will alternate entertainments, giving one meeting for dancing and another for cards. Altogether, people may prepare for an unusually brilliant season.
